COURSE INFORMATION

Class Hours and Location:
Mondays, 7:10 – 9:00 p.m. (2 credits), Room 243.

Office Hours:
As an adjunct professor, I do not keep office hours. On most class days, I will be available for a short time before and after the class period. If you would like to meet separately, please send me an email and I will try to accommodate an appointment. I will also provide an opportunity to connect to discuss or review your final paper.

Course Materials:
Supplemental materials will be assigned to acknowledge and incorporate current developments.

Online Content:
I will provide various handouts and other class-related materials via email. If you prefer an email address other than your Hofstra email address, please let me know.

Attendance:
The rules of the American Bar Association require students to be in good and regular attendance in the courses for which they are registered. Outside of approved (by me) absences, you may miss no more than 2 hours of class, or 1 class session.

I will take attendance and, if you exceed the permitted absences, you will be withdrawn from the course. You will receive notification from the Law School to this effect. Administrative withdrawal from a course may have serious consequences on other aspects of your financial aid, enrollment, and future aspirations.

Please notify me, as soon as possible, if you believe you must miss more than one class or the permitted number of hours. Accommodations may be made for students who must be absent for religious reasons or in cases of compelling hardship.
Class Participation:
As lawyers, our positions benefit from critical dialogue. I expect active class participation. Outstanding, conscientious participation in class may result in your grade rising a bit (e.g., B \rightarrow B+); conversely, failure to participate or engage constructively may result in downgrading (e.g., B \rightarrow B-) . Frankly, open conversation will make this course a whole lot more interesting, so please bring your authentic, inquisitive selves to the classroom. Constructive disagreement is encouraged. Our time together will revolve around topics over which there are intense feelings; we will actively listen to one another’s views with respect. I will deal swiftly with any issues if I deem that respectful decorum has been breached.

Coming Late, Leaving Early:
Avoid, please. Consistent, objectionable skirting of attendance may result in deductions from your grade.

Grading:
Grades are based on (i) a reaction paper of approximately 3-5 pages in length and (ii) a final paper of approximately 15-20 pages in length. As previously noted, in-class participation will also impact the final grade.

Classroom Address:
I will address you by the first names provided to me by Hofstra University. There may (still) be a preference in law schools for addressing students by surname, preceded by “Mr.” or “Ms.” (or “Miss”); however, these forms of address are gendered and I feel strongly that each individual should be able to choose their preferred title, rather than feel the need to conform to or correct an assigned one from me. I will call on individuals without prior notice. If you would like for me to address you by a name (or title) other than the first name by which you are identified, please let me know as soon as possible and I will address you by your preferred name (or title). “Professor” is gender-neutral, so please refer to me as “Professor Gulley” or “Drew,” according to your own conventions.
SYLLABUS

This course explores how law (and, by extension, we) regulate the expression of sex and gender, conduct of sexual intimacies, access to state-granted benefits, and protection in one’s livelihood. By extension, this course will also examine how certain expectations and assumptions about sex, gender, and romantic love permeate American and international law. That is quite a lot to cover.

The subjects we will touch upon are fiercely debated at home, in courtrooms, and on the floors of legislative chambers. The outcome of these debates is, quite literally, life or death for some citizens. Topics such as hate crime, abortion, rape, domestic violence, prostitution, gender confirming surgery on adults and intersexed children, and discrimination based on gender and sexual orientation continue to both divide and unite our country. In our chosen profession, we are increasingly likely to counsel clients on laws related to matters of sexual orientation and gender identity (especially in representing gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender clients); therefore, this the course will also address laws related to domestic partnerships, adoption, marriage, child custody, and discussion of sexual identity in various private and public settings, such as schools and the workplace.

References to numbered pages that appear below refer to the Casebook. The syllabus contains a topical outline of the course, as well as a schedule of course coverage. The schedule tracks the topical outline by indicating on which days we will cover which topics.
